

AMBITIOUS REWARD.

A money blow of brass and bronze,
Molded by ponderous blow on blow
For Nor or Venepian's son,
In the ages dim and long ago.

A cruel maul, a swinish chin,
A wretched eye almost erased,
But had the date, a victory,
Two words, and those almost defaced.

Where the golden palace now That on the Palatine arose?
Where are the statue-guarded doors?
Where are the temple porticoes?

For disks of metal shaped like this,
Swords have been drawn and Lethal crossed;
For this, in greedy hope, men's souls
Have been by passion's tempest tossed.

This is ambition's rich reward:
This is a buried Cæsar's fame—
Upon a lump of rusty bronze
The two-shield of a doubtful name.

Albert's Choice.

"Tell me, Kate, are you glad or sorry?" and the little hands clasped nervously, while the dark eyes anxiously scanned the quiet face that gave no answer to the eager question.

"I am glad," she said, "because I have two friends; one quiet, retiring, almost cold in manner, the other quick, bright, and full of feeling; one tall, fair, and clothed in widow's weeds, the other small, dark, and clad in those warm tints that bring brunettes delight in, in every particular presenting marked contrast, yet bound together by a friendship as warm as school girl devotion, and as lasting as life itself."

The elder of the twin, the one addressed as "Kate," looked up with a smile, and taking her friend's hand, she said: "If it is to be so, I think I shall be glad. I shall be glad always, if you are happy, and I think Albert can make you happy, if he will."

"You think the doubt lies in the 'will' then?"

"If there be any doubt at all," answered Kate, "but, Fanny, the sole cause for doubt could not be easily removed if he would consent."

"And the cause is?" asked Fanny.

"A glass of wine," answered Kate.

"I thought so," said Fanny, "and that is the reason I came to talk with you this morning. I don't think Albert ever drinks excess; I don't think his father ever did, and you know wine has always been in daily use in Mr. Hale's house."

"I don't think so," said Fanny, "and I broach the subject of temperance that your husband, Mr. Clifton, was not a total abstainer, and yet I know that your marriage was a happy one."

"I don't think so," said Fanny, "and

and all things went on as before—so Fanny thought.

"Hallo, Hale, glad to see you; didn't expect you back so soon; come and have something cool this hot day."

"No, thank you," said Albert. "I must go straight to the office. I shall have to attend strictly to business, you know, until I feel fairly initiated."

"Yes," replied his friend, "been promoted, haven't you? I'd congratulate you if it were not too hot weather."

One evening near the end of the year, a year of total abstinence for Albert Hale, as he was strolling about town with one of his fellow clerks, they came to the well-lighted and pleasant rooms of the reform club.

"Let's go in and see what they're about," said Albert.

They were just in season to hear an animated and intelligent discussion of the events of Cromwell's time.

"Now a word about hot water, or hot water, or milk and water, but just straight good sense," whispered Albert to his companion.

The next week found the young man again in the same place. This time he was earnestly requested to sign the pledge and become members of the club. Albert hesitated. His friend said, "I will, if you will."

Should he do more for Frank Baker?
Remembering that Frank was already very, very fond of the dreaded cup, he wrote his name and donned the ribbon.

Again Fanny Denn was sitting with her friend, Mrs. Clifton. "Do you know," she said, "that it is reported that Albert Hale has been received as junior partner in the house for which he has been working?"

"He can hardly have lived up to his principles of freedom, I think," remarked Mrs. Clifton.

"I am glad he has done so well," said Fanny, "but after all I fear there is no permanent prosperity for him while he entertains such opinions."

There was a ring at the door bell, and a servant announced, "Mr. Albert Hale."

"So I have come to a meeting of the 'fanatics' here," he said. "Allow me to introduce a friend, and he pointed to the ribbon in his button hole."

Albert Hale is coming again at Christmas-time, and Fanny will return with him—a pair of the most uncompromising fanatics.

SHE KNEW

WHAT THE MULE DIED FROM.

Some weeks since a man traded a mule to his neighbor for a horse, warranting the old brayer to be sound in wind and limb. Not ten days had elapsed when the mule brayed his last bray and kicked his last kick.

The former owner refused to be held responsible, and the result was a lawsuit which was concluded recently in Justice alleg.

When the plaintiff had told what he knew and thought and expected, his wife was put on the stand, and on the cross-examination the defendant's lawyer said:

"Mrs. Smith, what did that mule die of?"

"Botts," was her prompt reply.

"Are you sure?"

"Yes, sir."

"Wasn't the beast choked to death with some fish-bones you gave him along with the mule?"

"No, sir. We haven't had a fish in the house for a year."

"Wasn't it possible that he might have swallowed a hair pin?"

"No, sir. I've counted my hair pins and none are missing."

"Do you ever buy poison to kill rats?"

"Never."

"Were you home when the mule was first taken?"

"I was."

"And you knew that his ailment was
botts?"

"Yes, sir."

"And you told your husband so?"

"I did."

"Mrs. Smith, do you call yourself a horse doctor or a mule doctor?"

"No, sir."

"Well, how are you so certain that the mule died of botts?"

"Because I am."

"I want a plain answer. How are you so certain that the mule died of botts?"

"Well, I looked him all over, and he didn't have the measles, chicken-pox, whooping-cough or dumb ague. My husband looked him all over, and he didn't have poll-evil, cold, sneezing or blind staggers, then we knew it must be botts."

"How did you know?"

"How did I know?" she echoed in an indignant voice. "Do you suppose I've kept horses for thirty-two years and been the mother of eleven children and don't know what the botts are? Why, I've knew 'em a dozen times myself, and the old man here would have died with 'em in March if I hadn't put on mustard poultices and drawn 'em out of his system by way of his feet! Botts! Why, I know 'em from Dan to Beelzebub!"

JUG BREAKING.

A NEW OUBOON AMUSEMENT.

A jug-breaking entertainment took place at the colored Methodist church in 16th street the other evening. Thirty members of the congregation bought earthenware jugs at three cents apiece and themselves deposited and induced their friends to deposit as much money in them as they were able. The accompanied money went to Rev. T. E. Franklin, pastor of the church, to make up to him in part his back salary, amounting to $135. For the jug containing the most money a prize of a silver watch was given; the next best jug took a silver cup and the jug third in rank was brought to its possessor a comb and hair brush, inclosed in a beautiful case.

Forty persons or more were assembled in the church when Mr. Williams, a prominent member, announced that he would break open the jugs with a hammer and ascertain the result. He smote the first jug sunder, and the coin fell out.

"Let's go in and see what they're
about," said Albert.

They were just in season to hear an

THE WINE-DEALERS' GAZETTE.

The Wine-Dealers' Gazette, the most reputable of the journals devoted to the liquor interest, says: "Public sentiment has outgrown the idea that men can be made pious or temperate by laws and penalties." Public sentiment has not outgrown the idea that statute law has still a value against theft, lying, and murder, even though, despite the best respect for the doing of Parli-ment, the diseases prevalent which provides pains and penalties for those who either commit crimes, or who are known directly to incite others to the commission of crime. It is not proposed, however, so much to make men temperate by law, as to abolish the mischievous law which enables a few men, for a money consideration, to tempt, by authority of the state, other men to commit crime and ruin.

The following temperance Bible readings were arranged by Mrs. Richardson, of Texas:

I. Priests not to drink.—1. Lev. x, 8, 9, 10, 11. 2. Isaiah xxvii, 7.

II. Rulers not to drink wine.—3.
First xxi, 1. 4. Proverbs xxxi, 4, 5.

III. A woe on drunkard-makers.—4.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

Consistency! Vote for men who are in favor of license and who you know would grant licenses; then condemn the license business.

A Lowell liquor dealer advertised a free lunch at his restaurant every day.
A lady took seven ragged and hungry boys to the saloon on the first day, nine the next, and twelve the next. The beer seller soon concluded that the free lunch was an expensive advertisement.

I would say to every young man in the United States, if I could reach him:
If you mean to attain one of the prizes of your profession and live a cheerful life to the age of eighty, throw away your dirty old pipe, put your cigars in the stove, and never buy any more, become an absolute teetotaler, take your dinner in the middle of the day, and rest one day in seven.—James Parson.

"The number of prisoners who have been committed to prisons with which I have been connected during the last fifteen years, amounting to 23,000, and among them I have come in contact with ministers of the gospel, numbers of persons who were once members of our churches, as also children of pious parents, and I never met with a prisoner who was not a teetotaler."—The Governor of Connecticut Jail.

We are not in favor of any kind of a license system. Rum-selling is either good or evil. If good, then it should have the same chance as any other kind of business. If evil, then it should be prohibited. The only remedy is the total prohibition of the sale of liquor.

The people of Meredith were saddened, on Monday morning, to learn of the death of Clara E. Elliott, although not unexpected, as she had been lying at the point of death for two days. She had only been sick a few days. She was a beautiful young lady loved by all. Her age was 27 years and 11 months and she was the daughter of Wm. P. Elliott, who is in business in Knans. She leaves a father, mother and two brothers. The funeral was Thursday afternoon.

To OUR READERS.—The Eagle Publishing Company having disposed of its interest in this paper to Mr. M. H. Calvert, already formerly known to many of you, and the undersigned, the EAGLE appears to-day under the new management, which we trust will prove satisfactory to all, as various improvements will shortly be introduced that must commend themselves to our patrons. Thanking a generous public for whatever appreciation has been previously bestowed, I remain yours most respectfully,

C. H. KIMBALL.

A WORD PERSONAL.—After several years experience among the people of this region and the White Mountains generally, I have concluded to try and form a closer acquaintance with that portion living in this vicinity by becoming the mouth-piece, or organ, whereby the needs of the neighborhood may be ventilated, and its circumstances and conditions improved to the general welfare of our citizens. In assuming the editorship of this paper I shall endeavor to adhere to the above policy, and will not encourage or invite anything of a personal nature to enter its columns, believing that personal matters should not be aired through the columns of a paper intended for general circulation. With this introduction I sink my individuality, and say we shall be very glad to see friends and strangers at all times, so come and you'll find the latch string out.

MATTHEW H. CALVERT.

"THE CYCLOPEDIA WAR."

The Cyclopaedia War and the Literary Revolution are working wonderful and happy results for the readers of books, and searchers after knowledge. The great "Library of Universal Knowledge," is announced to be completed, ready for delivery to purchasers, the early part of July. It is probably the largest and most important literary work this country and century have seen. It is based upon Chambers' Encyclopaedia, the last London edition of which is reprinted entire as a portion of its contents, a large corps of American editors and writers adding thereto, a vast amount of information upon about 15,000 subjects in every department of human knowledge. Chambers' Encyclopaedia, whose distinguished merit is universally known, is the laborious product of the ripest British and European scholarship, but being a work of foreign production it has been naturally deficient in its adaptation to the wants of American readers. In its new form it is most thoroughly Americanized, and becomes at once the largest and most complete cyclopaedia in the field, at a more fraction of the cost of any similar work which have preceded it, containing about 10 per cent more matter than Appleton's Encyclopaedia, at less than one-fifth its cost, and 20 per cent more than Johnson's Cyclopaedia at a little more than one-fourth its cost.

The superlative value and importance of this great Encyclopaedia however, lies especially in the fact that it is brought within the reach of every one who aspires after knowledge and culture. It is really a library of universal knowledge. It brings a liberal education easily within the reach of every plow-boy. Every farmer and every mechanic owes it to himself and to his children that such a cyclopaedia shall henceforward form a part of the outfit of his home. To the intelligent man in every walk of life, a Cyclopaedia is indispensable. It is issued in special styles, in 15 large beautiful octavo volumes, varying in price from $15 for the edition in cloth, to $25 for the edition in full library style binding. Liberal discounts even from these extraordinary prices are allowed to clubs, and the publishers besides, propose during the next two months to distribute $100,000 cash in special rewards to persons who forward clubs of five, ten, or more subscribers.

The American Book Exchange, 761 Broadway, New York, are the publishers, who will send sample pages and full particulars free on request.

MAN'S ENEMIES.

SMALL THINGS MINISTERS OF WRETCH.

A Mohammedan legend relates that when Abraham had been wronged by the mighty Nimrod, Jehovah befriended the persecuted Jew and told him to select an animal to punish his enemy. Abraham chose the fly; but Jehovah said: "If thou hadst not chosen the fly, I should have sent a creature a thousand of which would not weigh as much as a fly's wing."

This is only a bit of Oriental rhetoric, a figurative way of emphasizing the power of the Almighty, who can make the smallest things the ministers of his will; but in the light of modern science it has become a literal truth. Some of man's most powerful and persistent enemies are organisms so minute that a thousand of them would not equal the bulk or weight of a fly. The Lord of creation, as he proudly styles himself, is unable to cope with the most infinitesimal of his subjects. They are too small to acknowledge his way, and they are too small to be destroyed by his power. They are too small to be killed by his lightning bolts, and they are too small to be crushed by his thunder.

No hostile force of his own creation could inflict such disaster upon him as do these microscopic representatives of the lowest forms of life. They plunder and devastate whole provinces, bringing ruin upon long-established empires, and they are too small to be killed by his lightning bolts, and they are too small to be crushed by his thunder. They are too small to be killed by his lightning bolts, and they are too small to be crushed by his thunder.

Blake Bros., the New York bankers, have given $100,000 to the new memorial church fund at Newport. Their younger brother, now dead, went to school near the site of the church, and they wish to place a tablet to his memory.

Many outrages have been committed near Westport and in Little Compton and Tiverton, several parties having been killed and property destroyed. A short time ago, the well of Edward Howland was poisoned, resulting in the death of a boy, and the severe illness of three other persons. Later other persons have lost horses and other cattle by poisoning.

A drunken man with $638 was throwing away greenbacks by the handful at the Hartford station recently. He was arrested, sobered off and got his money back.

J. H. Bolton of Hartford and formerly of Stafford has sold an old homestead at Stafford Hollow which, when built a few years ago, was valued at about $12,000 to Cyril Johnson for $4,400. This is one of the best places in the town.

The stockholders of the Atina fire insurance company voted at Hartford to increase its capital by cash subscriptions from $3,000,000 to $5,000,000.

MAINE.

A fire broke out recently in the city of Quinebaug, and 24 houses, destroying nearly 1000 houses, and doing damage to the extent of $2,000,000. Briefly summed up, the streets consumed are: Building and street—Richmond, in part, principally the south side; La Tourette, St. Olivier, Richelle, Daquillon, St. John, Montclair, St. Gabriel, New York, in part, principally the west side and south—The principal streets were Sutherland, Deligny, St. Clair, St. Marie and St. Genevieve (west side), beside the city of Quinebaug.

Five persons were killed.

Some of the old customs which appeared at a recent English athletic gathering lately are worth mention. A young girl was described clad in a loose sand-colored flannel cloak and dress, with a pointed felt hat. She had cockle shells sewn on the garment and a staff in her hand. On the part of the crowd, a man was taken for a pilgrim in the time of the Crusades. Another costume worn on the same occasion might have been that of either a young lady or gentleman of the 18th century. A figure was enveloped in a black cloth, and a mantle. The only touch of color was a necktie of yellow silk. A black velvet cap was posed slightly on one side. A young lady in an evening dress was seen in a young lady with a slender figure. It consisted of a pale green serge gown. The bodice was cut square and fastened at the bust by heavy clasps of silver.

The long skirt was gathered all on the part of the waist, and was placed a little below the waist, and lower and larger reaching across the dress below the knee. The sleeves were puffed and a chemise of muslin underneath was visible. The skirt was fastened at the waist, and the lower end was fastened at the back by a long strap of straw and tied behind the left ear in a huge bow, where a pearl brooch in the shape of an anchor was thrust through.

Another dress of black velvet had huge puffed sleeves; a string of beads the shape and color of ivory, was worn at the throat; a bonnet like Britannia's was worn with the dress. Another costume consisted of a long, light-colored black velvet with gold satin facings. The short walking dress was of yellow satin; a yellow tunic was lined with gold gauze and trimmed with pink and red roses. The costume is a sort of mock affected by the followers of artistic dressing. The costumes we have just described were not worn at a masquerade but at an ordinary gathering of the friends of the school, and at a private view at the Grosvenor gallery, and these costumes give an excellent idea of how hideous high art may become and how much more successful a plain French modistes are in dictating style than the most sensible than any enthusiast, whether in art or bloomerism.—Corr. N. Y. Mail.

Chicago comes nearer being a vast hotel than it has been for years. No epidemic prevails, and the city is not afflicted with disorders of a very serious nature; but it is estimated that fully 20 per cent of the entire population is troubled with derangement of the system in one form or another. The complaint is usually some thing akin to winter cholera, and there is a well-grounded suspicion in the minds of a great number of practicing physicians that the ailments are to a very large extent attributable to the consumption of the bilge-water that is drawn from that illimitable reservoir of filth, Lake Michigan, for the use of the city. In fact, it is more than a suspicion. It is a certainty. To a certain extent. Besides those who are down right sick, there are whole regiments of people who feel poorly, but will not admit that they are on the list of ailing. The persons who say they are well, respond, "who want water?" and, as long as the river in its impure state is allowed to empty into the lake, there can be no such thing as pure water. In addition, the reason that more or less filth and sewage are pumped into the lake is that the city is so large that it is impossible to dispose of the refuse of the people.—Chicago Times.

The strike of freemen and coal-havers on various coasting steamship lines at New York continues to be a serious matter along the North river front, a strike and threatening.

Riding is the order all over Ireland and many people have been killed, including several soldiers and policemen. Field Marshal Telford of Austria has been driven to suicide by an incurable malady.

Mr. Vesuvius is slinking its sides, and the great stream of lava is flowing down the northeast slope.

A fire at the East end, London, has totally destroyed 30 houses, including a range of workshops and some schools. The losses of the farmers this year from poor seed will amount to $2,000,000.
